Ruth May Change Style.

Many writers have predicted that the big fellow is going after a record of fifty home runs this year after he has established a new record to start to play for his team. He has not been doing that at any time this year. His whole thought has been on that home run record. If you take the time to look up his record you will find the Baltimore boy has not made a single sacrifice hit this year. And he has had abundant chances to do so. Nothing doing on the "lay-it-down" with him. "Hit them out" has been his motto, but after you discover that he has made more home runs than any other man in the major league, someone is going to take a fatherly interest in him and show him, now that he has secured what he started after, that it is team work that wins.

If President Griffith can secure a man to play the infield, one that can field his posttion in any kind of style, the team will soon come back. The pitchers have been going badly, that is true, but it has been the work of the infield more than any other that has lost so many games. Hardly one in a dozen times is a double play made when the ball is hit to short, as the toss is always bad to the pivot man, and Harris is one of the best in the business in this line. But he cannot make a play when the ball is thrown over his head or at his feet. Until that is remedied the team will make very few double plays. Had two of them been made last week when chances were offered the Nationals would have won both games, but on account of the loss of time in getting the ball to Harris, both games were put down on the wrong side of the ledger.
